SYNOPSIS

Brillant journaliste, mais porté sur l'alcool et les femmes, Steve Everett a dû renoncer à son emploi au New York Times pour un poste beaucoup moins en vue à l'Oakland Tribune, sur la Côte Ouest des États-Unis. Même si, depuis trois ans, il a cessé de boire, sur le plan des relations amoureuses, il ne s'est guère assagi. Lasse de ses fredaines, son épouse Barbara s'apprête à le quitter et, bien qu'il l'aime toujours, il ne peut s'empêcher de courir le jupon. Il a en ce moment une liaison avec Patricia, l'épouse de son confrère Bob Findley, tout en couvant d'un œil doux sa jeune consœur Michelle Ziegler. Par une nuit d'orage, celle-ci meurt dans un accident de voiture. Alan Mann, rédacteur en chef de l'Oakland Tribune, confie donc à Steve le reportage sur lequel elle travaillait : l'exécution de Frank Beechum, un garagiste noir condamné à mort pour avoir abattu Amy Wilson, une caissière blanche et enceinte de surcroît, sous prétexte qu'elle aurait refusé de lui rembourser une dette de 96 dollars. Steve ne met pas longtemps à comprendre que Frank est innocent, mais il n'a que quelques heures pour le prouver. Un entretien avec Dale Porterhouse, le principal témoin à charge, lui confirme que ce dernier n'a pas pu voir Frank, l'arme à la main, penché sur le corps de la victime. Il apprend ensuite qu'un jeune drogué, Warren Russel, a été aperçu sur les lieux du crime. Toutefois, la police a négligé de poursuivre l'enquête dans cette direction. Grâce aux notes de Michelle, Steve retrouve l'adresse du délinquant, mais Angela, sa grand-mère, lui annonce qu'il est mort entre-temps, poignardé par des voyous. L'heure de l'exécution approche. Frank fait des adieux émouvants à sa femme Bonnie et à sa fillette Gail, puis il prend son dernier repas. Steve, désespéré d'avoir échoué, est à deux doigts de sombrer de nouveau dans la boisson. Soudain, il se souvient avoir vu au cou d'Angela un médaillon appartenant à Amy. La vieille dame reconnaît que son petit-fils le lui a offert le soir du meurtre. Ensemble, ils se précipitent chez le gouverneur. Sont-ils arrivés à temps ? Le dénouement semble l'indiquer, mais est-ce un rêve ou la réalité ?

The Death Penalty in America

Britain influenced America's use of the death penalty more than any other country. When European settlers came to the new world, they brought the practice of capital punishment. The first recorded execution in the new colonies was that of Captain George Kendall in the Jamestown colony of Virginia in 1608. Kendall was executed for being a spy for Spain. In 1612, Virginia Governor Sir Thomas Dale enacted the Divine, Moral and Martial Laws, which provided the death penalty for even minor offences such as stealing grapes, killing chickens, and trading with Indians.

Laws regarding the death penalty varied from colony to colony. The Massachusetts Bay Colony held its first execution in 1630, even though the Capital Laws of New England did not go into effect until years later. The New York Colony instituted the Duke's Laws of 1665. Under these laws, offences such as striking one's mother or father, or denying the "true God", were punishable by death.

Congress and state legislatures may prescribe capital punishment for certain crimes. It has been held that the death penalty is not a per se violation of the eighth amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishment. Not all states provide for the death penalty. Most states that do employ capital punishment have an age requirement.

Amendment VIII: Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Prosecution

If somebody is prosecuted for murder, he faces trial. In court, the state prosecutor – the district attorney or DA – demands the death penalty for any case in which 2 or more people have been murdered. The person accused is defended by a lawyer – a private lawyer if he can afford it or a lawyer appointed and paid by the state.

The guilt or innocence of the person charged with murder is decided by a jury made of 12 jurors, ordinary citizens.

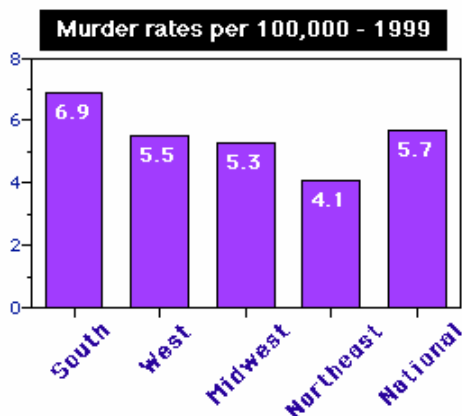

If the jury's verdict is that the person accused is guilty, then he is convicted of murder and the judge sentences him to death.

If there is new evidence (a new testimony, a result of a legal test...), the person sentenced can appeal of the verdict.
