

sept jours sur sept, coupées du monde, lavant le linge des hôtels, des universités. Grâce à la puissance du clergé, ces institutions sont maintenues jusque dans les années 70. Il faudra cependant attendre 1996 pour que le dernier de ces couvents-prisons soit fermé.

PISTES PÉDAGOGIQUES

Themes evoked:

- Imprisonment
- Female exploitation
- Abusive power and cruelty
- Catholic beliefs in Ireland in the 1960s

Teaching materials:

- Photo tirée du film (anticipation, suppositions "sisters")
- Article from ABC News website (checking hypotheses, rules: obligation and interdiction, opposing the position of the Church and that of the film director's, writing a film review...)

THOUSANDS ENSLAVED BY IRELAND'S CATHOLIC CHURCH Wounds Still Fresh For Thousands of Women Enslaved by the Catholic Church

By Hilary Brown and Matt McGarry

Over a period of 150 years, an estimated 30,000 women were imprisoned by the Catholic Church and forced to work without pay. (ABCNEWS.com)

CORK, Ireland, Jan. 26 – A sudden spate of TV exposés, docudramas and a major motion picture have brought to light one of the most shocking episodes in the history of the Catholic Church in Ireland – the existence of the now-notorious "Magdalene laundries", a sanctified form of slavery.

Operated by the Sisters of the Magdalene Order, the laundries were virtual slave labor camps for generations of young girls thought to be unfit to live in Irish society.

Girls who had become pregnant, even from rape, girls who were illegitimate, or orphaned, or just plain simple-minded, girls who were too pretty and therefore in "moral danger" all ran the risk of being locked up and put to work, without pay, in profit-making, convent laundries, to "wash away their sins".

They were completely cut off from their families, and many lost touch with them forever.

Stripped of their identities, the girls were given numbers instead of names. They were forbidden to speak, except to pray. If they broke any rule or tried to escape, the nuns beat them over the head with heavy iron keys, put them into solitary confinement or shipped them off to a mental hospital.

Over a period of 150 years, an estimated 30,000 women were forced into this brutal penance, carried out in secret, behind high convent walls.

Towards the end of the 20th century, the laundries began to close, as the power of the Church in Ireland diminished and as social attitudes became less puritanical. Incredibly, the last Magdalene laundry to shut down was in 1996.

'We Were the Living Dead'

Mary Norris, 69, was committed to a convent laundry in Cork for two years. An articulate, intelligent woman, she was transferred from an orphanage at age 15 because she was "disobedient". Her number was 30.

On one occasion, she said, the nuns actually ordered the girls to pray for those held in Soviet prison camps, a bitter irony, as she considers the convent laundries “an Irish gulag”.

Though it was clearly very painful for her, she took us around the convent – now abandoned – where she had suffered so much.

“In the winter, it was freezing cold, and in the summer, it was like the desert, it was so hot with the steam”, she said. “We were the living dead. We weren’t treated as human beings, as individuals. We were just part of the workforce. Nothing more, nothing less”.

Guilt by Illegitimacy

Sadie Williams, 64, spent a total of four years in two different convent laundries. She was 14 when she was virtually kidnapped by two women who had determined that she was “in moral danger”. Williams liked to take a walk in the evenings, after working all day at a bed and breakfast in Dublin. She said the women considered her much too attractive to stay out of trouble.

She was only 14 when she ended up in a convent laundry outside town as “Number 100”, and locked into a cell each night. She says she almost never saw daylight.

“Oh, it was dreadful”, she said. “I cried and cried all the time, and kept asking why, why wasn’t I getting out. And I would write begging letters to my mother. When I finally got out, she was already dead and buried three years. But I was never told, even though I was writing, still writing letters to her”.

She has since learned that the nuns stopped all her mail. Her mother wasn’t married, so Sadie was considered to be guilty of the sin of illegitimacy.

No Apology

There have been no direct reparations from the Irish Catholic Church to the tens of thousands of women it used as slave labor. Nor has there been a formal apology. It’s not even known how many victims of the Magdalene laundries are still alive: they are not organized, and many don’t want to talk about this terrible part of their past.

Very few Churchmen in Ireland will comment on the scandal. An exception is Willie Walsh, the Bishop of Killaloe. Over a cup of tea in his residence, he said that it is “a source of pain and shame”.

“These girls were rejected by society, and the Church in some way thought it was giving refuge to these girls”, he says. “I suppose [...] the Magdalene laundries was in some instances a form of slavery”.

The Rev. Patrick O’Donovan is more outspoken.

“It’s an appalling scandal”, he says. “You could compare them to concentration camps. [...] The nuns thought they were doing good. [...] They didn’t realize the damage they were doing”.

Mary Norris has campaigned to have a simple memorial built in the convent where she was held. Thirty names are engraved on a simple headstone; dating from 1876 to 1973. Some women spent their entire lives in these institutions. Having been cut off from their families, they had nowhere to go.

Norris says she no longer hates the nuns who oppressed her. “If I hated them”, she says, “they’d still be winning. They’d still have control over me”.

Copyright © 2003 ABCNEWS Internet Ventures

<http://abcnews.go.com/WNT/story?id=129865&page=1>

SITOGRAFIE

- ▶ www.catholicnews.com, a Catholic criticism of the film (film denounced by the Vatican the same day it won the Golden Lion at the Venice Film Festival)
- ▶ <http://film.guardian.co.uk>, a complete review
- ▶ www.bbc.co.uk/dna/collective/A971264, an interview with Peter Mullan

The Magdalene Laundries

Song by Joni Mitchell

I was an unmarried girl
I'd just turned twenty-seven
When they sent me to the sisters
For the way men looked at me
Branded as a jezebel
I knew I was not bound for Heaven
I'd be cast in shame
Into the Magdalene laundries

Most girls come here pregnant
Some by their own fathers
Bridget got that belly
By her parish priest
We're trying to get things white as snow
All of us woe-begotten-daughters
In the streaming stains
Of the Magdalene laundries

Prostitutes and destitutes
And tempresses like me
Fallen women
Sentenced into dreamless drudgery
Why do they call this heartless place
Our Lady of Charity?
Oh charity!

These bloodless brides of Jesus
If they had just once glimpsed their groom
Then they'd know and they'd drop the stones
Concealed behind their rosaries
They wilt the grass they walk upon
They leech the light out of a room
They'd like to drive us down the drain
At the Magdalene laundries

Peg O'Connell died today
She was a cheeky girl
A flirt
They just stuffed her in a hole!
Surely to God you'd think at least some bells should ring!
One day I'm going to die here too
And they'll plant me in the dirt
Like some lame bulb
That never blooms come any spring
Not any spring
No, not any spring
Not any spring

Copyright © 1994; Crazy Crow Music

Voir toutes nos fiches pédagogiques de films